2024 HIGHLIGHTS

- ▶ Launched the Value of Sociology Initiative
- ▶ Hosted the successful 119th Annual Meeting in Montréal
- ▶ Released the report “Public Policy and the Well-Being of Transgender and Gender Diverse Youth in the United States: A Sociological Resource for Public Understanding”
- ▶ Created three new ASA Communities: Community College Faculty; Community Engaged Scholars and Teachers; and Sociologists in Prison Education
- ▶ Added a new Section journal, Sex and Sexualities, with a first issue publication date set for 2025
- ▶ Concluded the Minority Fellowship Program fundraising drive with over $1.7 million donated in total
- ▶ Developed the new and enhanced ASA Career Center
- ▶ Created the suite of resources on “Majoring in Sociology: A Pathway to Opportunity”
- ▶ Welcomed Heather Washington as the new executive director of ASA
- ▶ Further expanded the TRAILS database of teaching resources with five new collections
- ▶ Offered six all-member webinars, two Department Affiliate webinars, and six graduate student proseminars
- ▶ Debuted a new membership portal and database
- ▶ Broadened social media reach with an account on Bluesky
- ▶ Continued our robust advocacy efforts

PROUD OF WHAT WE ACHIEVED

Dear Colleagues,

I am proud of the work ASA accomplished in 2024. The Annual Meeting program theme “Intersectional Solidarities: Building Communities of Hope, Justice, and Joy” brought us together in Montréal to consider how sociology can move beyond documenting inequalities and toward building solidaristic communities working for a better world. We also celebrated many well-deserved awards, and ASA staff created an inclusive, joyful, and smooth-running meeting, our first outside the United States since the start of the pandemic.

My presidential address highlighted sociologists working worldwide on solution-oriented, community-engaged work. These sociologists from non-governmental organizations and colleges and universities collaborate with communities to identify and solve problems that communities face. Building on feminist and decolonial participatory methods, I argued that research and teaching, grounded in community, contribute to a better public understanding of sociology and a more just world.

Also in 2024, sociologists came together for our Value of Sociology Initiative, which emphasizes the importance of sociology at a time when sociology— as well as efforts aimed at diversity, equity, and inclusion—are under attack. As former ASA President Prudence Carter, current President Adia Wingfield, and I wrote in response to Florida’s Board of Governors’ removal of sociology from core course options, “The politicization of education is a dangerous practice for democracy.” Through the Value of Sociology Initiative, we pushed back against this politicization and worked to widen public perceptions of sociology.

Throughout 2024, the Association emphasized protecting academic freedom and highlighted the importance of sociology. We curated an array of tools for sociologists facing threats (including a webinar on teaching under pressure), while helping our members advocate for sociology and academic freedom through our resources on writing op-eds and communicating with legislators. Those with degrees in sociology provided examples of how their work is positively informed by a sociological perspective and makes a difference in the world. ASA will continue combating misinformation about sociology and demonstrate how sociological knowledge can help solve contemporary social issues.

Our improved member portal and updated Career Center, while challenging to implement, have made membership engagement easier and offered job-seekers access to more employment opportunities. ASA staff worked tirelessly through these transitions, all while providing professional development opportunities, promoting our publications through podcasts, public outreach, and teaching tools; supporting our terrific Minority Fellowship Program, doctoral dissertation improvement grants, and other fellowships; and facilitating professional networking through Sections and Communities. We regularly engaged in advocacy efforts that supported the work of sociologists, including emphasizing the importance of funding social science research and data sources, and insisting on recognition of academic freedom.

I am particularly proud of our ASA Communities; we currently support groups for community college faculty, community-engaged scholars and teachers, first-generation and working-class sociologists, sociologists in prison education, sociologists working everywhere, and communities serving Filipino, Korean, and South Asian sociologists. Every year new communities have emerged, and we are delighted to see these engagements.

Our Association provides a space for sociologists, wherever we practice sociology, to work together and support one another. This year we witnessed heart-breaking situations worldwide, including deadly conflicts raging in the Middle East, Africa, the Caribbean, and Europe, polarizing elections, as well as catastrophic natural disasters in the U.S and abroad. I am grateful to every member who engaged with the Association, our dedicated staff, and thoughtful leadership team, who graciously gave their time to serve the discipline and support other sociologists. Our shared commitment as sociologists to protect academic freedom and the discipline, and to use sociological knowledge and tools to contribute to a better world, are central to our mission.

Sociology as a discipline is stronger when we work together.

CONVENING THE ANNUAL MEETING

ASA 2024 Presidential Address

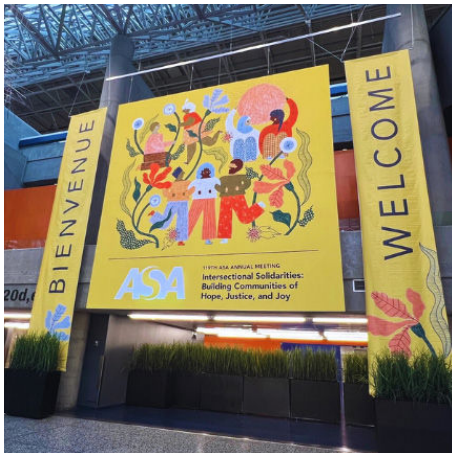

Sociological Solutions: Building Communities of Hope, Justice, and Joy

In her presidential address at the ASA 2024 Annual Meeting, Joya Misra made the case for sociologists to move toward solution-oriented, community-engaged, and participatory research for the benefit of society. She argued that “the central mission of sociologists today should be to work with communities to provide opportunities for experiencing hope, joy, and justice.”

“Critically, work done in collaboration with communities must also be centered in how we recognize and evaluate sociological work, pushing back from neoliberal models of academic production and interrupting the complicity of sociology and higher education in colonial processes,” she said.

Throughout her address, Misra gave examples of her vision for the future of sociology, one in which researchers move from the academy to the community. She noted that, while sociological research has influenced policies on subsidized childcare and parental leave laws, as well as identified and created solutions for faculty workload inequities, for example, in too many instances, researchers have stopped short of offering solutions to the problems they identify.

“We have to do the work to identify inequalities before we can identify more equitable approaches,” she said. “But I worry that we too often stop at identifying the disjunctures, the inequalities, and the brokenness of our world. We do not see ourselves as equipped to use our knowledge in conversation with the communities we work with to develop new solutions. Yet, I believe sociologists have the tools to do so.”

Misra concluded by charging her U.S. colleagues to draw inspiration from community-engaged sociological research projects in countries worldwide. ASA members and journal subscribers can read her entire address in the January 7, 2025 online issue of the American Sociological Review. Anyone may access the video recording in the Annual Meeting Video Archive.

Plenary Sessions

Three Plenary Sessions rounded out the ASA 2024 Annual Meeting’s topical and incisive programming:

Academic Freedom in a Fearsome Age

Addressing recent attacks on academic freedom, defunding of DEI, and research restrictions, this plenary panel included the voices of leaders focusing on fighting against censorship in higher education from a variety of angles. This session served as a gateway to sessions and workshops focused on building community around academic freedom at the 2024 meeting.

SUPPORTING PARTNER

ASA thanks the University of Massachusetts Amherst, the supporting partner of the 119th Annual Meeting, for helping to make this convening possible.

Transnational Feminist Solidarities

Drawing from a long history of decolonial and intersectional theorizing, as well as feminist activist work, transnational feminist sociology sheds light on the effects of myriad forms of marginalization—such as capitalism, racism, transphobia, and ableism. In this panel, scholars engaged in transnational feminist work discussed both the challenges and the joys of working to build solidarities across borders.

Abolition Feminism and Building Communities of Justice

In this exploration of Abolition Feminism—an alternative perspective to dominant forms of criminal justice intervention in which, rather than applying the punitive power of the state, new systems of care and collaboration are crucial for creating a safe, humane, and equitable world—participants challenged the field of sociology to reconsider its assumptions, methods, and activities, while employing a radical imagination grounded in the work of Black and Indigenous women.

Professional Development and Networking for All

Throughout the Annual Meeting, we offered attendees a wide range of opportunities to connect with one another and chart their next professional steps.

The ASA Retirement Network planned many activities, including a business meeting; the annual Life in Sociology Lecture, with keynote speaker Barbara Katz Rothman, City

Department Leader
Preconference, Keynote Littisha Bates (University of Cincinnati).

University of New York; a workshop, “You Don’t Know What You’ve Got ‘til It’s Gone: Continuity of Scholarly Resources after Retirement;” and a panel, “The Many Ways of Being a Sociologist after Retirement.”

The Student Forum Advisory Board organized three paper sessions, several roundtable sessions, a workshop, a reception, and a business meeting. Forty-five students were awarded travel funds to attend the meeting and participate in the program. The 2024 Student Forum Paper winner, Baskota Adhikari, Helen Keller International, also received a travel award for their paper, “Behavior on Nutritious Food: An Analysis of Newly Affluent of Kathmandu Valley, Nepal.”

The 2024 Honors Program was comprised of 26 students from 19 universities. Students were welcomed by ASA Council and staff, attended an orientation that included a “Conference 101” lecture, sat in on panels on graduate school and career pathways, attended plenaries and regular sessions, connected with leadership from Alpha Kappa Delta International Sociology Honor Society, and were recognized during the student reception. Honors students presented their own research during the Honors Discussion Tables Sessions, presided over by faculty members sitting on the Honors Advisory Board.

The Department Leader Preconference—a daylong event for department chairs and directors of graduate and undergraduate studies—was based on the theme “Navigating, Mediating, and Rising Above Conflict.” It included a keynote address by Littisha Bates, University of Cincinnati, as well as panelists Erynn Casanova, University of Cincinnati; Carollette Norwood, Howard University; Barbara Combs, Kennesaw State University; Mikalia

Arthur, Rhode Island College; Queen Zabriskie, Antioch College; Sarah Mayorga, Brandeis University; Eric Wright, Georgia State University; Selena Gallo-Cruz, Syracuse University; and ASA staff.

The Practice Settings Symposium offered sessions focused on the use of sociology in applied settings and included the presentations “Forced Criminality in Human Trafficking: Improving Documentation and Support in Services Provision” by Ethan Czuy Levine, Coalition to Abolish Slavery & Trafficking, and “Pragmatic Solutions to Leveraging Participatory Qualitative Methods in Applied Healthcare Research Settings” by Valerie L. Chepp, Cleveland Clinic.

The Teaching and Learning Symposium is a space for participants to gather specific and applied teaching ideas to use in their own classrooms. This year’s presentations and workshops included “Sociology as Pedagogy: The Intersection of Culturally Responsive Pedagogy, Anti-Racist Practices, and Trauma-Informed Educational Practices” by Bethany Lee Van Brown, Sacred Heart University; “Yes, You Can Get a Job with That! Communicating the Value of Sociology to Students, Families, and Employers,” by Melinda Jo Messineo, Ball State University; and “The Joy of AI for Teaching and Learning in Sociology,” by Angelika Ruta Gulbis, Madison College.

The newly introduced ASA Pavilion, a dedicated professional development space located in the Exhibition Hall, featured talks that introduced attendees to various ASA opportunities and resources, such as potential leadership opportunities, grants and awards, Sections and Communities, publishing opportunities, and more.

The Prep Talks series focused specifically on career advice and mentoring. It covered topics such as creating research and teaching statements, career opportunities in practice settings, readying for advancement to full professorship, developing an effective resume and cover letter, tips for navigating the pretenure years, securing postdoc positions, and understanding trends in the sociology job market.

Jeffrey Timberlake (University of Cincinnati) gives a Prep Talk in the ASA Pavilion on Navigating the Pre-Tenure Years.

HONORS PROGRAM

Honors Cohort, Advisory Board, and ASA Staff at the 2024 Annual Meeting.

PANELISTS

Graduate students Andrea Smith (University of Iowa), AJ Sanchez (University of Illinois at Urbana Champagne), and Sara Tehrani (University of Central Florida) sat on a panel discussing applying and thriving in graduate school.

ASA Annual Awards

The recipients of the 2024 Annual Awards were honored during a ceremony at the ASA Annual Meeting in Montréal. Congratulations to our distinguished colleagues who have demonstrated excellence in scholarship, teaching, practice, and public understanding of sociology.

Cox-Johnson-Frazier Award

The Cox-Johnson-Frazier Award honors the intellectual tradition of Oliver Cox, Charles S. Johnson, and E. Franklin Frazier, who placed their scholarship in service to social justice with an eye toward advancing the status of disadvantaged populations.

John B. Diamond, Brown University

Given to Diamond in recognition of his wide-ranging research on myriad aspects of achieving social and ethnoracial justice in education, his work taking on key issues in race and education from multiple perspectives, as well as his work as a generous and transformative community leader.

Dissertation Award

Luis Flores, Harvard University

“The Regulatory Politics of Home-Based Moneymaking After the American Family Wage,” completed at University of Michigan

In recognition of Flores’s dissertation, which offers a novel understanding of the rise of household market activity in recent decades, propelled in part by the survival strategies of those on the margins of the capitalist economy.

Honorable Mention

Brandon Alston, The Ohio State University

“Policing the Black Metropolis: Race, Surveillance, and Resistance,” completed at Northwestern University

Luis Flores ▶

Recipient, 2024 Dissertation Award

Distinguished Career Award for the Practice of Sociology

Robert Courtney Smith, The City University of New York-Baruch College and Graduate Center

Given to Smith for his influential work on the sociology of migration, which has transformed academic spaces, legal precedents, migrant rights, the capabilities of nonprofit organizations, and the lived experiences of migrant families.

Monica M. White, University of Wisconsin-Madison

Given to White for her creative and justice-oriented academic research that is helping to shape conversations in sociology, food studies, rural studies, environmental justice studies, and African American history.

Distinguished Contributions to Teaching Award

Robin G. Isserles, The City University of New York-Brooklyn College

Given to Isserles for her work fostering engagement and growth within the discipline, including by expanding pedagogical practices in community college settings and challenging the narrow way academia evaluates community colleges.

Michele Lee Kozimor, Elizabethtown College

Given to Kozimor in recognition of her work that has increased quality of conversations around teaching and learning, invited more voices into the discussion, and encouraged a broader perspective of what a well-rounded sociologist can be.

Monica M. White ▶

Recipient, 2024 Distinguished Career Award for the Practice of Sociology

Distinguished Scholarly Book Award

Jordanna Matlon, American University and Institute for Advanced Study in Toulouse

A Man among Other Men: The Crisis of Black Masculinity in Racial Capitalism (Cornell 2022)

In recognition of Matlon’s text as an exemplar of sociology’s promise to explain the relationship between social structures and social life that speaks to several of the discipline’s largest and most central subfields.

Honorable Mentions

Yang Su, University of California-Irvine

*Deadly Decision in Beijing: Succession Politics, Protest Repression, and the 1989 Tiananmen
Massacre* (Cambridge 2023)

Hajar Yazdiha, University of Southern California

The Struggle for the People’s King: How Politics Transforms the Memory of the Civil Rights Movement (Princeton 2023)

Jessie Bernard Award

The Jessie Bernard Award is given in recognition of scholarly work inclusive of research, teaching, mentoring, and service that has enlarged the horizons of sociology to encompass fully the role of women in society.

Public Understanding of
Sociology Award

The Public Understanding of Sociology Award is given to a group or individual who has made an exemplary contribution to the general public’s understanding of sociology, sociological research and scholarship.

Cecilia Menjivar ▶

Recipient, 2024 Jessie Bernard
Award; 2024 Public Understanding of Sociology Award

Cecilia Menjivar, University of California-Los Angeles

Menjivar received the Jessie Bernard Award for her conducted game-changing feminist research, tireless efforts to expand opportunities for women, generous mentorship, and support the rights of vulnerable populations through scholarship.

Menjivar has also received the Public Understanding of Sociology Award for broadened the public understanding of sociology through these avenues, and specifically though her work with community and immigrant groups and legal advocates to intervene in the courts on behalf of women and children fleeing violence and persecution in Central America.

W.E.B. Du Bois Career of Distinguished Scholarship Award

Michael Burawoy, University of California-Berkeley

Given to Burawoy in recognition of his extensive body of work,
field-transforming interventions in research methods, promotion of public sociology, leadership in the discipline, and commitment to teaching.

FOSTERING CONNECTIONS

Fifty-three Sections and eight Communities offered year-round programming and networking events in 2024. In this second full year of Community activities, ASA added three new groups: the Community College Faculty Community, the Community Engaged Scholars and Teachers Community, and the Sociologists in Prison Education Community.

Sections

Sections enable members with similar research interests to connect. In 2024, Sections had a busy year, offering numerous professional development webinars, Annual Meeting panels, mentoring programs, and networking events. Our Sections are:

- ▶ Aging and the Life Course
 - ▶ Altruism, Morality, and Social Solidarity
 - ▶ Animals and Society
 - ▶ Asia and Asian America
 - ▶ Biology and Society
 - ▶ Children and Youth
 - ▶ Collective Behavior and Social Movements
 - ▶ Communication, Information Technologies, and Media Sociology
 - ▶ Community and Urban Sociology
 - ▶ Comparative-Historical Sociology
 - ▶ Crime, Law, and Deviance
 - ▶ Decision-Making, Social Networks, and Society
 - ▶ Disability in Society
 - ▶ Drugs and Society
 - ▶ Economic Sociology
 - ▶ Environmental Sociology
 - ▶ Ethnomethodology and Conversation Analysis
 - ▶ Family
 - ▶ Global and Transnational Sociology
 - ▶ History of Sociology and Social Thought
 - ▶ Inequality, Poverty, and Mobility
- ▶ International Migration
 - ▶ Labor and Labor Movements
 - ▶ Latina/o Sociology
 - ▶ Marxist Sociology
 - ▶ Mathematical Sociology
 - ▶ Medical Sociology
 - ▶ Methodology
 - ▶ Organizations, Occupations, and Work
 - ▶ Peace, War, and Social Conflict
 - ▶ Political Economy of the World-System
 - ▶ Political Sociology
 - ▶ Race, Gender, and Class
 - ▶ Racial and Ethnic Minorities
 - ▶ Science, Knowledge, and Technology
 - ▶ Social Psychology
 - ▶ Sociological Practice and Public Sociology
 - ▶ Sociology of Body and Embodiment

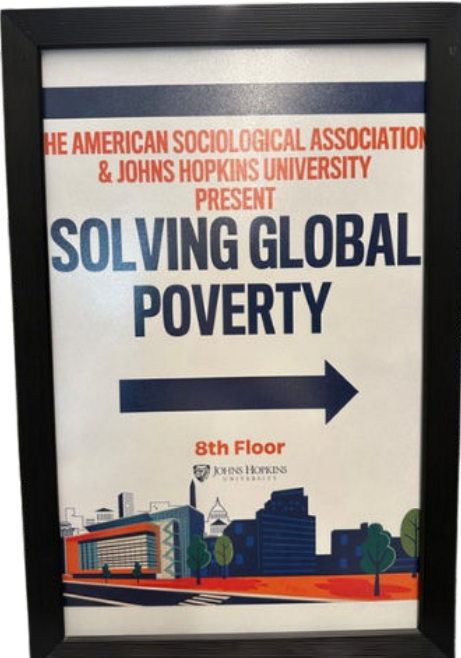

- ▶ Sociology of Consumers and Consumption
 - ▶ Sociology of Culture
 - ▶ Sociology of Development
 - ▶ Sociology of Education
 - ▶ Sociology of Emotions
 - ▶ Sociology of Human Rights
 - ▶ Sociology of Indigenous Peoples and Native Nations
- ▶ Sociology of Law
 - ▶ Sociology of Mental Health
 - ▶ Sociology of Population
 - ▶ Sociology of Religion
 - ▶ Sociology of Sex and Gender
 - ▶ Sociology of Sexualities
 - ▶ Teaching and Learning in Sociology
 - ▶ Theory

Section Highlights

Some of the highlights from ASA Sections in 2024 were:

- ▶ The Sociology of Development Section had a fabulous conference on Solving Global Poverty at the Johns Hopkins University Bloomberg Center in Washington, DC, on October 18-20, 2024. Participants explored ways to apply a sociological understanding of organizations, systems, governance, and collective action to global poverty in order to bring about change. The full program and plenary recordings are available on the conference website here.
- ▶ The Peace, War and Social Conflict Section has continued to share its members' scholarship and expertise through publicly accessible virtual talks. Recorded presentations are available on the section's YouTube Channel. In 2024, these included diverse topics such as the complex dynamics of violent and nonviolent resistance, the transnational repression of Filipino activism, sexual harassment, assault and discrimination in the U.S. military, sociological insights on October 7 and the war in Gaza, nonviolent organizing in Rio de Janeiro's gang territories, wartime suffering and survival in the blockade of Leningrad, racialized state violence and the 19th- and 20th-century U.S. economy, a panel by Sudanese scholars on the conflict in Darfur, and ethnographic research into the local violence experienced at one of Africa's largest goldmines.

- ▶ The Animals and Society Section—with support and participation from the Environmental Sociology Section; Science, Knowledge, and Technology Section; and Indigenous Peoples and Native Nations Section—organized a preconference at the ASA 2024 Annual Meeting, entitled “Intersectional Solidarities: Building Communities of Hope, Justice and Joy Across Species.” This pre-conference provided a welcoming space to forge collective partnerships across sub-disciplines, identifying intersections and possibilities for collaborations. The event included numerous lightning talks; workshops on teaching, networking, and biodiversity loss; as well as brilliant talks by David Pellow, University of California-Santa Barbara, and Amy Fitzgerald, University of Windsor.
- ▶ The Disability in Society Section held a workshop event called “Sociology is Better with Disability,” which focused on how disability and ableism play a role in shaping some of our most pressing social problems. Also in 2024, Emerald Press published Research in Social Science and Disability (RSSD) volume 15 on “Disability and the Changing Contexts of Family and Personal Relationships.” RSSD proceeds help support the Disability in Society Section.

Communities

ASA Communities are designed to create new spaces for connection, belonging, and networking that transcend research foci, and also help members more easily answer the question “Where are the people like me in ASA?” In addition, they provide new avenues for professional development and mentoring and provide a broader range of opportunities for engagement and leadership in ASA. These are the 2024 Communities:

NEW! Community College Faculty Community. This Community seeks to build an enduring space for connection, communication, as well as sharing, promoting, and celebrating the work of its members.

NEW! Community Engaged Scholars and Teachers Community. This Community supports scholars and practicing sociologists engaged in or interested in community engaged research and teaching (CERT) by providing opportunities for community, networking, support, and discussion.

Filipino Sociologists. Through the Filipino Sociologists Community, ASA is working to create a space for connection, belonging and networking for Filipino sociologists, including those in the diaspora and in the Philippines, and their allies and friends.

First-Generation and Working-Class Sociologists. Sociology is a field that includes many first-generation college attendees and people from working-class backgrounds. ASA is working to learn more about the interests and needs of this group, to foster inclusion and combat elitism, and to help first-generation/working-class sociologists connect with each other and with valuable resources.

Korean and Korean American Sociologists. Through the Korean and Korean American Sociologists Community, ASA is creating a new space for belonging and networking within the ASA and in the field of Sociology within the United States. The Community aims to support its members by promoting networking, mentoring, and collaboration and by providing opportunities for engagement and leadership.

NEW! Sociologists in Prison Education Community. Teaching sociology in carceral settings is a demanding, yet profoundly rewarding endeavor. This Community offers peer networking and support, professional development, and opportunities for advocacy.

Sociologists Working Everywhere. A lot of great sociology takes place outside of faculty positions and universities. ASA provides resources for students considering a career in nonprofit, government, or corporate organizations, as well as ways for sociologists working in these settings to connect and expand their networks.

South Asian Sociologists. Through the South Asian Sociologists (SAS) Community, ASA seeks to provide opportunities for networking, mentorship, and the exchange of ideas among sociologists of South Asian/American/diaspora descent.

SOCIOLOGISTS IN PRISON EDUCATION ▶

Community Highlights

Some of the highlights from ASA Communities in 2024 were:

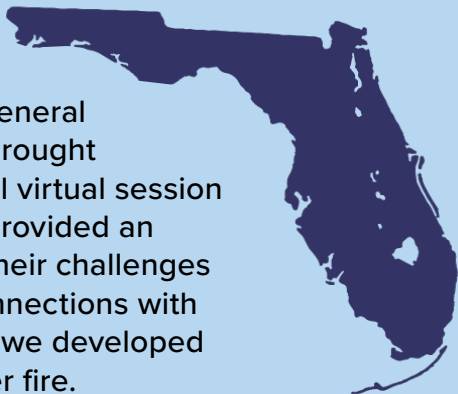

The Sociologists in Prison Education Community currently has 250 members and held its first business meeting at the 2024 ASA Annual Meeting in Montréal. It held its first virtual panel in December, where experienced instructors offered advice about overcoming challenges associated with teaching in carceral settings.

The South Asian Sociologists Community grew substantially in 2024 from 85 to 278 members. In addition to holding an event at the ASA Annual Meeting in Montréal, it held three virtual events, including “Challenges Faced While Navigating Academia as a South Asian Sociologist” in April and a Zoom workshop on navigating the academic job market in October. In October, it also introduced a monthly digest of news and announcements, including publications, conferences, and more.

The Sociologists Working Everywhere Community (SWE) had three inspiring projects this year! It started a mentor-mentee matching project in May, which allows people within the Community to offer or receive mentorship from others. It received 110 applications (94 mentees and 28 mentors) and successfully created 50 mentor-mentee pairs with support from volunteers. Also in May, SWE kicked off its Sociologist Spotlight Speaker Series, which focuses on today’s applied sociology in industry and nonprofit settings. The series was open to the public but was of special interest to sociologists in academia who are curious about alternative career paths and to sociology graduate and undergraduate students who seek insights on their range of job options. Speakers included Valerie Chepp, Cleveland Clinic; Claus Tjaden, Martinez Tjaden LLC; and Dawn Godbolt, Maven Clinic. In March and September, SWE hosted social networking virtual happy hour events, providing networking opportunities for new and current members.

VALUE OF SOCIOLOGY IN FLORIDA

After the Florida Board of Governors removed sociology as a general education requirement for the state’s public universities, ASA brought together members in the state and ASA leadership for a special virtual session “Value of Sociology in Florida,” in January 2024. This session provided an opportunity for sociologists in Florida to share their work and their challenges in the face of increased political scrutiny, as well as to build connections with one another. ASA also shared some of the resources and tools we developed as part of the Value of Sociology Initiative for sociologists under fire.

SUPPORTING PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT

ASA provided professional development support to members for teaching, research, and career development. An overview of some of our activity follows.

TRAILS

The Teaching Resources and Innovation Library for Sociology \(TRAILS\) is an online searchable database of 3,500 peer-reviewed teaching resources including assignments, class activities, assessments, syllabi, and more. Editor Stephanie Medley-Rath, University of Indiana-Kokomo, led 40 editorial board members in the peer-review process and added five new teaching resource collections:

- ▶ Social Problems
- ▶ A Sociological Ear: Listening and Music
- ▶ Social Theory Syllabi, Assignments, and Activities
- ▶ Using Fiction in the Classroom
- ▶ Social Movements and Collective Action

Stephanie Medley-Rath

In addition to the “GIFTS: Good Ideas for Teaching Sociology and Publishing in TRAILS” workshop held at the Annual Meeting, editorial board members also guided attendees through the development of their own submissions and demonstrated how using TRAILS increases teaching efficacy by hosting workshops at various regional association meetings such as the California Sociological Association, Eastern Sociological Association, Midwest Sociological Society, North Central Sociological Association, Pacific Sociological Association, and Southern Sociological Society.

Virtual Programming

In 2024, ASA continued its mission of delivering virtual programming specifically designed to bolster and help advance the professional lives of our members. This year’s slate of informative and engaging webinars, proseminars, and forums on pertinent topics helped to provide information to empower students, teachers, department leaders, and sociologists in practice settings. In response to members’ requests for support during these challenging times for the discipline, our programming paid specific attention to highlighting the various ways we can advocate for the utility of sociology, supporting instructors in their teaching, leveraging ASA and external resources, and strategizing for careers.

ChairLink Live: Forums on the Fifth

These ongoing forums are a benefit for ASA Department Affiliates. They are designed to help department chairs connect, share resources, discuss issues in higher education, and effectively respond to the challenges of department leadership. We held six forums in 2024, some of which were led by ASA Program Reviewers and Consultants. Discussions covered many topics, including preparing for external program review, tips for new chairs, department morale, and strategies for working with school administration.

► THE VALUE OF SOCIOLOGY

“Drawing on my sociological training in theory, research methods, and statistical analysis, I designed assessment tools that led to a significant and positive shift in state policy regarding juvenile delinquency.”

–Claus Tjaden, Co-founder/Consultant, Martinez Tjaden LLC

ASA Student Forum

Members of the ASA Student Forum hosted two workshops titled “Making the Most ASA Annual Meetings” and “Beyond the Ivory Tower: Elevating Sociology Together,” as well as two writing sessions.

New Career Center

In 2024, ASA moved to an enhanced member data management system and career center to provide a better experience for members. This new resource includes ads for full- and part-time positions in academia, sociological practice, and applied sociology, and it also includes pre- and post-doctoral fellowships.

Job Bank Report

Each year, ASA releases a report overviewing trends in the job market as indicated by the previous year’s listings in the ASA Job Bank. The report issued in 2024 and based on 2023 findings suggest the types of jobs advertised closely mirror pre-pandemic offerings, indicating a return to normalcy. They also suggest the top specializations in demand seem to be driven by current issues, particularly those related to race relations, criminal justice, health, and climate change. To read the report, click here. Future reports will be based on the data collected through the new Career Center.

Community Engaged Scholarship

ASA’s William T. Grant Foundation-funded pilot project, “Shifting the Academic Ecology to Support Community Engaged Scholarship,” concluded in 2024. In support of the project’s goal to remedy the disconnect between traditional academic reward structures and socially transformative research, we recruited teams from the sociology departments of George Washington University, Howard University, and the University of Maryland to partner with ASA to test a process for engaging departments and relevant institutional administrators in reviewing their tenure and promotion criteria. The three teams have completed the work necessary to develop revised tenure and promotion guidelines. One set of guidelines has already passed through departmental channels, and we expect the other two to proceed in 2025. Heather Washington, the PI for the project, presented this work at a convening of deans, with a positive reception. ASA also ran a successful workshop on this effort at the 2024 Annual Meeting to get feedback and share information about the project with our members. ASA is working with the Sociology Action Network on the next steps that might emerge from this pilot initiative.

New Resources for Aspiring Sociology Students, Families, and Advisors

As part of our efforts to grow the discipline, ASA developed the Majoring in Sociology: A Pathway to Opportunity web resource in 2024. Designed for aspiring sociology students, their families, and advisors, the page is jam-packed with useful information. Not only does it help to answer the common question “What is sociology?”, it also highlights how the sociological imagination helps students learn critical life skills, such as how to observe society and analyze, report on, and understand complex social phenomena.

The web resource includes a broad spectrum of topics sociology students can pursue, as well as videos on exploring next steps for sociology undergraduates and how sociology majors are using their skills in the workplace. There are also testimonials from former students about the value of their sociology degree and access to tons of additional resources on possible career paths and more.

ASA members already understand the value students get from sociology courses, where they learn to view the world from multiple perspectives and begin to see how individuals and social institutions are interconnected. Now, this new site illustrates for a broad audience just how these skills empower students to engage critically and constructively both inside and outside of work.

Please encourage your students to visit the site. We hope it will be a useful resource for you. ASA also developed convenient companion brochures and booklets, should you need them. They are available in the ASA Store here.

ASA extends great appreciation to the following ASA members for their hard work in developing this document: Jeffrey Chin, LeMoyne College; Alicia Brunson, Georgia Southern University; Ahoo Tabatabai, Columbia College of Missouri; Melinda Jo Messineo, Ball State University; and Jeanne Mekolichick, Radford University.

Majoring in Sociology:
A PATHWAY TO OPPORTUNITY

FUTURE OF SOCIOLOGY

Technology, social and cultural challenges, geopolitics, and greater integration with fields like artificial intelligence, data science, and environmental studies are likely to help shape the future of our discipline. As the discipline evolves, ASA will find ways to train, support and develop graduate and early career practitioners across many subdisciplines.

Community Action Research Initiative Grants

We offer Community Action Research Initiative Grants to sociologists seeking to work with community organizations or community action initiatives for projects that bring social science knowledge and methods to bear in addressing community-based problems. The 2024 recipients were:

Nabila N. Islam, Brown University

Immigration Dialogue: Resisting and Raising Awareness about Digital Surveillance and Detention of Immigrants

This project brings together eight immigrants, a facilitator from the Boston Immigration Justice Accompaniment Network, and a researcher to work on three projects: a social media video campaign with first-hand experiences of the Immigration and Customs Enforcement’s Alternatives to Detention (ATD) program; academic publications and blog posts; and a multimedia website on the impact of ATD.

Janaina Saad, University of Wisconsin-Madison

Dreaming Together: The Collective Organization of Support Centers for Informal Workers in Brazil

In collaboration with the Workers Without Rights Movement, this project will survey the working conditions of informal workers in the city of São Paulo and identify key grievances that can help direct the organization’s advocacy and organizing efforts.

Shelly Steward, The Workers Lab

Understanding and Addressing the Challenges of Disabled Workers

The Workers Lab is an organization devoted to building a world in which all workers are safe, healthy, secure, and have power. Through this project, it will engage with disabled workers to understand the challenges they face and collaboratively design and implement solutions that will allow disabled workers to live, work, and thrive.

ASA Doctoral Dissertation Research Improvement Grants

In 2024, ASA awarded 26 Doctoral Dissertation Research Improvement Grants (ASA DDRIG), totaling $407,118 to support highly talented doctoral students at 21 different institutions who are conducting cutting-edge research that has the potential to both advance sociological knowledge and contribute to the public good. This year’s funded projects contribute to at least 28 different substantive areas within sociology and use a range of methods including ethnography, comparative historical, topic modeling, survey experiments, archival, visual methods, and others.

The program conducted a workshop at the ASA Annual Meeting in Montréal as well as a virtual Q&A session in September 2024 which was well attended by prospective applicants. To date, 60 PhD sociologists representing a range of sociological areas, methods, and institutions and organizations have served as reviewers for the program. As a testament to the success of the program, in 2024 ASA received a $2.3 million dollar grant from the National Science Foundation to fund the ASA DDRIG for four more years.

Elif Birced, Boston University

Rethinking Control and Autonomy in the Age of Platforms: The Case of Sponsored Content Creation in Turkey

Using 60 interviews with creator economy actors and participant observation in Turkey, Birced’s research will focus on sponsored content creation on social media platforms in which creators promote brands in return for receiving paid sponsorships. The work will extend the literature on work and social media studies by bringing a new perspective on the relationship between labor control and autonomy in a fast-growing segment of workers.

Caroline V. Brooks, Indiana University-Bloomington

Invisible Illness, the Self, and the Role of Social Networks

Using multiple methods, including in-depth interviews and a survey on social networks, identities, and well-being of individuals with migraine, Brooks’s project will explore how social connectedness may buffer or exacerbate the negative influence of illness on an individual’s identities and psychological well-being. Findings may be used to develop community programming tailored towards improving patient quality of life.

Jason Azriel Campos, Texas A&M University

The Barrio Lives On: Mapping the Social Constructions of Criminality and Resistance in a Gentrified San Diego Community

Drawing on interviews with neighborhood residents, ethnographic fieldwork, and aggregate crime and victimization data, Campos will investigate what factors influence the perceptions of Latina/o criminality and how they shape criminal outcomes. Insights gained from this project will be shared with community members, academics, and practitioners to deepen understanding on the influence that local and state officials have when enforcing criminal laws on Latinas/os and on the neighborhoods where racial and ethnic minorities live.

Eunchong Cho, University of California-San Diego

A Generation in Search of Hope: Youth Social Movements and Youth Identity in Post-2010 South Korea

Cho will use in-depth interviews, archival research, and topic modeling to develop historical counterfactuals and then test them using process tracing methodology. This research will unpack the struggles and hopes of the young generation in South Korea, who are grappling with a precarious and uncertain future and will contribute to the literature on social movements and expand sociological theories of boundary-making and identity formation.

Alejandra Cueto, Brown University

The Power of Classification: The Role of Social Movements in State Knowledge Production in Argentina

Cueto’s study will combine interviews, participant observation, archival analysis, survey data, and spatial analysis to study how knowledge production between institutions and social movements shape both public policies and state agencies. The findings of this research will yield insights into the effects of the collaboration between civil society and the state in making neglected populations more visible within the context of global urban crises.

Irene Del Mastro N., University of California-Los Angeles

Street Medicine: Coaching, Sorting, and Healing the Unhoused

Del Mastro N. will conduct 24 months of participant observation of street medicine teams in Los Angeles, contributing to the scholarship on patient-doctor interactions, health disparities, and poverty governance. The work will inform advocates and policymakers about benefits and unintended consequences of street medicine.

Julia Dessauer, University of Virginia

Power in Hollywood: Work, Agency, and Authorship in the Era of #MeToo

Dessauer’s dissertation will draw on more than 80 interviews with Hollywood insiders to examine the intersection of changes in work and employment relations with representational struggles over how narratives of gender, race, and sex are created. This project will contribute to sociology of culture, gender, labor, and elites, and have broader implications for the future of creative industries and diversity and equity in workplaces.

Alexandra Eleazar, University of California-Santa Barbara

Digital Labor, Colonial Landscapes, and Privileged Migrations to Guatemala

Eleazar’s project is a documentation of the possibilities of digital labor and an exploration of the realities of European and North American migration, inequality, and tensions within Guatemala. The research will illuminate the dynamic and shifting relationships between digital labor, migration, social-environmental responses, and unequal mobility.

Madison Garcia, University of Wisconsin-Madison

“We Can Get You More Money:” The Opportunities and Challenges of Nonprofit-Based Solutions for Inequities in the Transition to College

Garcia will use multilevel data from 15 months of ethnographic observations and interviews at an arm of a college access nonprofit organization to examine how the organization’s staff promote college-going among low income, first-generation Latinx youth of varying citizenship and immigrant statuses. This work will further the understanding of successes and constraints among college access nonprofit organizations.

Courtney Marciá Gardner, University of Central Florida

Advancing Beyond Deficit Models: How Joy is Cultivated Among Black Transgender and Nonbinary Young Adults in Florida

Gardner’s research aims to investigate the specific processes through which joy is cultivated and maintained among Black transgender and nonbinary young adults in Florida. Data derived from a larger, multidisciplinary project will consist of in-depth interviews with Black trans and nonbinary people ages 18-26. This research will inform social policies and practices that produce actionable interventions that enhance well-being among these groups.

Hana Gebremariam, Temple University

A Study of Black and White Students’ Experiences with the Climate and Organization of College Mental Health Services

Through in-depth interviews with administrators and mental health providers, Gebremariam’s project will consider how institutional-level factors may shape racial inequities despite the increased availability of college mental health services. Findings will contribute to the literature on mental health and racial inequalities and have practical implications for how colleges can better organize resources to meet diverse students’ needs.

Erin Ice, University of Michigan

The Making of the Family Caregiver

Ice will combine interviews and ethnographic case studies of stroke caregiving with a national longitudinal survey on older adults with various disabling health conditions to examine the consequences of families providing medically intensive care at home. This study will address the potential inequalities arising from recent policy initiatives and implications for the resulting quality of care for recipients.

Kayla M. Kemp, Pennsylvania State University

Making Private School Mainstream: A Comparative/Historical Study of Religion and Race in Segregation Academies and Christian Schools

Kemp will use descriptive quantitative analysis, archival analysis of periodicals and government documents, content analysis of school websites, and interviews with school administrators to contribute to research about educational equity through increasing understanding of segregation academies, an understudied mechanism of systemic racism in U.S. education.

Kristina E. Lee, Northwestern University

The Transnational Racial State: Afro-Descendant Inclusion and Shifting Antiracist Frameworks in Latin America after the World Conference Against Racism

Drawing on federal policy, legislation, and correspondence regarding Afro-descendants and racism, Lee will examine Mexico and Peru in relation to their broader regional context to deepen understanding about race and the state beyond the scale of nation. This research will provide valuable insight regarding the impact of antiracist interventions from supranational organizations.

Catharina O'Donnell, Harvard University

Locally Polarized Mobilization: How Partisan Segregation Shapes Conservative and Progressive Mobilization

O'Donnell will collect new quantitative data to explore how local environments shape political activism, with an emphasis on understanding Republican-aligned mobilization. This project will contribute to our understandings of polarization and group boundaries, political mobilization and participation, and the role of place in national movements.

Keitaro Okura, Yale University

Americanness and Inequality: Boundaries of Deservingness, Legitimacy, and Trust

Okura will use descriptive and experimental surveys that examine the social and symbolic boundaries of U.S. national membership, as well as draw on a large sample of American participants, to examine how they demarcate concrete social boundaries such as deservingness for citizenship and social welfare. The study will pose key implications for how and when boundaries of national membership relate to social stratification and inequality in the U.S.

Kritika Pandey, University of Southern California

Culture(s) of Activism: Investigating Domestic Worker Organizing in India and the U.S.

Pandey will combine transnational feminist ethnography, interviews, and archival data to investigate collective action for worker rights across the two different national contexts of India and the U.S. The research will investigate how privileging a global worker identity may inadvertently flatten intersectional challenges of racial, caste, and class-based hierarchies in specific national contexts and impede both mobilization and advocacy for policy changes.

Guangquan Shen, Indiana University-Bloomington

Dealing with Marriage Pressure: Changes and Continuities in Marriage in Urban China

Shen will employ a mixed-method design, integrating in-depth interviews with social network analysis, to assess lived experiences of unmarried individuals and the influences of social network in China. This study has implications for scholarship on gender, sexualities, family, and social networks.

“The knowledge one gains from sociology is immeasurable and applicable across numerous career paths.”

—Sarah Orr, Senior Premier Support Consultant, Roche Diagnostics

Tyler Smith, University of Washington

Punishment as Labor: The Historical Struggle over Classifying Prison Industries

Using archival data and comparative-historical methods, Smith will investigate how labor organizations played an important role in restricting prison contracts and infused the debate over forced prison labor with ideological relevance in the wake of slavery’s abolition and rapid industrialization. The project will help illuminate how symbolic debates can change both the meaning and function of the U.S. penal system and how modern forms of carceral labor were shaped by historical struggles over labor classification.

Summer Sullivan, University of California-Santa Cruz

Leafy Greens and Digital Dreams: Race, Labor, and the Future of California Farm Work

Through semistructured interviews, participant observation, and archival research, Sullivan will bring together long-standing concerns in environmental sociology with theories of racial capitalism. This project will contribute to discussions of farmworker safety through an environmental justice lens amid climate change and digital agriculture.

Joseph van der Naald, City University of New York-Graduate Center

Organizing Outside and Under the Law: A Comparative Case Study of Public Sector Unionism in Michigan and Ohio, 1960-1985

Van der Naald will compare public-sector labor movements in Michigan and Ohio, two states with robust unions but divergent laws and institutions regulating public-sector labor relations, to explore the forces that propelled government unionism during its most formative period. The research will provide insight into how labor can organize to overcome present obstacles.

THE VALUE OF SOCIOLOGY

“Sociology is not just a field of study; it’s a lens through which you can understand and navigate the complexities of the modern world.”

—Nicole Jones, Growth Operations Technical Specialist, Prosci

Hazel Velasco Palacios, Pennsylvania State University

Immigrant Healthcare Nexus: A Comparative Analysis of Healthcare Access in Pennsylvania’s Latina/o Farmworker Families

Velasco Palacios’s project will introduce the Immigrant Healthcare Nexus, a new perspective considering how labor conditions and socioeconomic factors influence health-care decisions among immigrant and mixed-status families. This work will bridge the gap between academia, health-care providers, and farmworker communities, promoting greater awareness and advocacy for addressing health-care access barriers.

Karyn Vilbig, New York University

Redistribution and the Top 10%

Through analysis of survey data, an original conjoint survey experiment with an oversample of high-income respondents, and in-depth interviews, Vilbig will explore the sources and limits of high-income support for redistributive policy with a special focus on the roles of racial attitudes and concerns over top-end inequality.

Benny Witkovsky, University of Wisconsin-Madison

Fig Leaves or Fortresses: Nonpartisan Politics in a Polarized Time

Using innovative methods and data, including analyzing video recordings of city council meetings and reviewing local political party social media activity, Witkovsky will examine how local nonpartisan actors resist, exploit, and succumb to partisan polarization. This research will highlight the real pitfalls of one of the nation’s greatest experiments in mitigating partisan conflict—one that should be a lesson for future reforms.

THE VALUE OF SOCIOLOGY

“My sociology major has been instrumental in shaping my understanding of societal structures, power dynamics, and systemic injustices, which has profoundly influenced both my professional and personal life.”

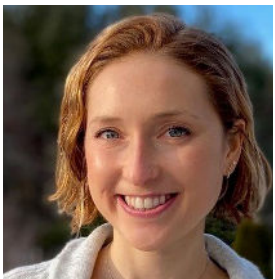

—Dionna Brown, Youth EJ Programs, National Director, Young, Gifted & Green

Xinyi Zhang, New York University

Exploring Variation in Residential Trajectories of Long-Time Black Residents from a Gentrifying Neighborhood in New York City

Zhang will use in-depth interviews and ethnographic observations of a carefully constructed sample of current and former long-time Black residents at different stages in their residential move trajectory from a rapidly gentrifying neighborhood in Brooklyn, NY, to help understand the costs of gentrification on Black Americans. Research findings will contribute to targeted policy designs and community-building efforts to combat the negative impacts of gentrification.

Shira Zilberstein, Harvard University

The Making of Ethical AI: Developing Machine Learning Solutions for Healthcare

Using mixed-qualitative methods, Zilberstein will explain how interpersonal, organizational, and cultural dynamics impact the construction and enactment of morality in applied, interdisciplinary AI research to help shed light on the ways in which applied research collaborations define problems and solutions in relation to specific practices, projects, organizations, agendas, and public narratives. Research findings will contribute to building technologies that better serve the needs of all stakeholders, address issues of equity, and holistically improve health care.

Minority Fellowship Program, Cohort 51

ASA’s Minority Fellowship Program (MFP) supports students of color pursuing a doctoral degree in sociology to ensure a diverse and highly trained workforce assumes leadership and research roles relevant to today’s society. The following students joined the 51st Cohort of MFP Fellows:

Roger S. Cadena Jr., University of Notre Dame

The Construction, Connection, and Communication of Latinx Identities and Politics

Cadena’s dissertation explores how Latinxs construct interpretations of social structure, social identifications, and political parties; how they connect these interpretations to political behavior; and how they communicate these interpretations to others.

Catherine Crooke, University of California-Los Angeles

Representing Refugees at the End of Asylum

Crooke’s dissertation examines how immigration attorneys understand, manage, and persist in helping people navigate a politicized, control-oriented legal environment.

Kristen L. Miller, The City University of New York-Graduate Center

Rideout: Freedom and Collective Movement in Black Biking Subcultures

Miller’s dissertation is a multisite ethnography on collective Black biking in the U.S. and South Africa. She traces the personal, social, and political effects of the feeling of Black freedom during “rideouts.”

Caylin Louis Moore, Stanford University

Under Pressure: The Lifecycle of Criminal Classification

Moore’s dissertation uses ethnographic research and in-depth interviews to analyze how the state (co) creates criminal status in its inhabitants.

Christopher E. Robertson, University of Minnesota-Twin Cities

Covenanted-Policing: Policing, Spatial Racism, and Health (In)Equity in Minneapolis, MN

Robertson’s dissertation examines how historical spatial racism shapes contemporary policing practices and neighborhood health outcomes.

Aya M. Waller-Bey, University of Michigan

No More Trauma: Black Student Racialization in College Admissions

Waller-Bey’s dissertation examines narrative strategies of Black students in college admissions essays in response to narrative expectations, as well as how admissions officers interpret these narratives.

Carla B. Howery Teaching Enhancement Grants

Recipients of this grant to support projects that advance the scholarship of teaching and learning within the discipline of sociology include:

Lauren Danielowski, Asmita Aasaavari, and Dunahay Pereyra, University of Connecticut

Turning Theories into Action: A Proposal for a Feminist Graduate-Student Led Teacher Training

This team is working to design a feminist teacher training for graduate instructors and TAs. Grounded in the principles of reflexivity, the training will provide a pedagogical approach to suit the needs of multiple institutions and course types, connecting theory with practice.

Lauren Danielowski

Asmita Aasaavari

Dunahay Pereyra

Brian Gran and Reema Sen, Case Western Reserve University

Game for Change

This team is working to adopt gamification as an innovative teaching approach to bring “real life” scenarios into sociology classrooms. The project will engage with social justice teaching and learning scholarship with a focus on diversity, gender, and inclusiveness.

SCHOLARSHIP AND OUTREACH

In 2024, we brought the latest sociological scholarship to a broad audience through our publications and related podcasts, and we promoted sociologists and their research through multi-pronged media outreach efforts.

Journals

ASA journals had more than 7.3 million page views in 2024, with more than 3.9 million article downloads. We acknowledge the commitment of the journal editors, deputy editors, editorial boards, and editorial office staff to ensuring the wide dissemination of sociological knowledge.

ADVOCACY

The American Sociological Association (ASA) is committed to advocacy that supports academic freedom, stable research funding, and policies grounded in scientific evidence. Together with partners such as the Council of Professional Associations on Federal Statistics \(COPAFS\), the Consortium of Social Science Associations \(COSSA\), the National Humanities Alliance, and others, ASA issues statements when there is consensus in the sociological literature and on matters concerning the well-being of the discipline and profession.

In 2024, our Value of Sociology Initiative helped ASA combat legislative and political attacks on sociology by equipping sociologists with tools to advocate for the discipline, share impactful stories, and engage policymakers. This initiative highlighted the discipline’s essential contributions to foster public understanding and help guide policy.

ASA also provides resources to help sociologists amplify their voices in public and policy discussions. To promote sociological research, ASA members served as subject matter experts for media outlets, wrote op-eds, and were promoted on ASA’s social media and media relations platforms. ASA offers training webinars, a media toolkit, and assistance from our Communications Department to support these efforts. Additionally, ASA encourages the recognition of public engagement work as positively impacting tenure and promotion. Sociologists interested in engaging policymakers can access guidance on contacting legislators, tracking legislation, and participating in advocacy days in Washington, DC. The sociological community can collectively strive to counter attacks on academic freedom and demonstrate sociology’s value in addressing critical societal issues.

In addition to advocacy resources, ASA’s Sociology Action Network \(SAN\) advisory board/panel provides support, resources, and educational opportunities for sociologists interested in collaborative, community-engaged approaches to research and teaching. SAN also helps guide the ASA and its membership to understand and recognize these approaches as essential to today’s sociology. By bridging sociological research with real-world applications, SAN strengthens the discipline and the communities it serves, reinforcing sociology’s role as a tool for social change.

GENEROUS FINANCIAL SUPPORT FROM MEMBERS

In 2024, our community provided generous financial support for accomplishing ASA’s mission of serving sociologists in their work, advancing sociology as a science and profession, and promoting the contributions and use of sociology to society.

Support for ASA Programs

ASA acknowledges the generous support of the following individuals, whose financial contributions to the Association have strengthened our discipline. Some of these donations provide unrestricted support to ASA, and others are used specifically for the American Sociological Fund, the Carla B. Howery Teaching Enhancement Fund, the Annual Meeting Travel Fund, or the Community Action Research Initiative Programs. If you would like to make a contribution, click here.

LOOKING TO THE FUTURE

Dear Colleagues,

Looking back on 2024, I remain incredibly grateful for the trust so many inspiring leaders and members have placed in me to serve our discipline as your new executive director. Last year was difficult; we witnessed sobering world events, natural disasters, and attacks on our discipline. Through it all, I was encouraged by the unwavering resilience and commitment of our members to support one another and to create a more equitable and just world. I look forward to working with you on the challenges ahead.

ASA’s Value of Sociology Initiative, which we launched in 2024, highlights the critical role sociology plays in helping to address real-world issues. Stories submitted by sociologists and students of sociology illustrate how sociology positively impacts our nation and the world. Quotes from these testimonials are presented in the Summer 2024 issue of Footnotes. Together they demonstrate how we collectively and positively influence our world through research, teaching, mentorship, partnerships with communities, and contributions to business, nonprofits, and academia. We know our members have more stories to tell about the impact of sociology. ASA members are contributing in important ways to addressing some of society’s most pressing issues, including inequities in health care, housing insecurity, immigration, environmental conditions, and myriad others. Please continue to share your stories with us in 2025.

I want to take a moment to thank our outstanding leaders and professional staff. I am fortunate to collaborate with a diverse group of visionary leaders who are exceedingly knowledgeable and compassionate and who generously give their time to guide our association. I remain extremely grateful for our professional staff, who are the backbone of everything we do. I am inspired daily by their hard work, dedication, and commitment to supporting our members and advancing ASA’s mission.

We can’t know what the future holds, but whatever challenges come our way, we will be stronger and more successful if we approach them together. The world needs sociology now more than ever. To be effective, we must be united in our focus on our shared mission to advance sociology as a science and profession and to promote the contributions and use of sociology to society. The determination, innovation, and creativity that sociologists embody gives me hope that we will continue to find opportunities to create positive and lasting change in our workplaces, communities, and society broadly. We must continue to be bold and unapologetic in our use of sociological knowledge and tools to reveal and eliminate inequities, elevate the voices of those whose stories have not yet been told, and chart new paths forward. I have seen what we can accomplish when we work together. I look forward to collaborating with you to support and defend our discipline, and to ensure that ASA remains a vibrant home for future generations of sociologists.

I wish you all a healthy, productive, and transformative year, and I eagerly anticipate greeting you in person at the 2025 Annual Meeting in Chicago.

With appreciation,

Heather M. Washington

Executive Director
